

Products Liability

If you are a manufacturer or distributor of any type of product, you need a law firm that understands how to protect your business from liability.

A product liability claim can be filed against anyone involved in manufacturing a product that has harmed a consumer. A valid claim has to include proof that the product is defective in design, manufacturing or marketing (improper instructions or failure to warn consumers of possible dangers that might result from using the product). The nature of this practice area is such that it often leads to class action litigation. Well known product liability cases include claims regarding tobacco, tire defects, SUV rollover and gas grills.

At HSB, the Products Liability practice group represents manufacturers and suppliers of a wide range of products. Many of our clients lead the market for their particular product. For clients with products that are the subject of frequent litigation, we serve as national counsel in order to ensure consistency in how the cases are handled.
